INTRODUCTION

Many individuals and groups have contributed to the development of this third edition of the Directory of Community Groups in Ontario. Again, we would like to acknowledge with thanks the assistance of municipal clerks, social service agencies (such as social planning councils, United Way organizations and community information centres), Members of Provincial Parliament, and staff of the Ministry who assisted us in identifying and locating approximately 1,700 community groups throughout the province.

Our objectives in publishing this revised directory continue to be:

- 1) to facilitate contact between community groups;
- 2) to enable government agencies, planners, elected representatives and other interested individuals and agencies more easily to contact community groups;
- 3) to develop a source of factual data regarding the nature of self-help community groups in Ontario.

In addition, this year we have included, as an appendix to the Directory, a summary of the questionnaire information received from groups who are listed in the Directory. This report describes the characteristics, interests, resources and trends of over one half of the community groups we contacted.

As of this printing, we have located 1,721 groups, an increase of approximately 600 over last year. All of these groups received an introductory letter explaining the purpose and potential usefulness of an updated Directory, and each was requested to complete an enclosed postage-paid questionnaire.

By the middle of July, 1974, approximately 1,300 completed questionnaires had been returned. From these, 953 were analyzed for the Directory. Community groups were selected on the basis of being primarily self-help, community betterment and volunteer associations which did not provide services to the community, or exist for primarily social reasons. Almost 75 per cent of the groups who returned questionnaires were suitable for inclusion in the Directory. Since July, we have received twenty-one questionnaires; thus the complete Directory lists 974 community groups.

A Note on the organization of the Directory

Each group that has been included in the Directory is listed three times: once in the alphabetical section, once in the listing of specific interests or activities, and once in the listing by geographic area. Maps have been included in the latter section.

An Overview of the Characteristics and Trends of Community Groups in Ontario

INTRODUCTION

At many levels of government, planners, administrators and elected officials are increasingly seeking out residents' groups and community associations to assist in determining local goals and objectives relating to planning priorities. Current examples of this trend may be evidenced in municipal, regional and provincial planning processes.

Complementing governments' actions to involve the public is the rapid growth in the number of community groups throughout the province, and the diversity of their concerns. These two factors have played a significant role in the history of public participation in planning decisions.

In addition, community groups are utilizing a high level of resources and procedures for achieving their goals. This has resulted in an almost unlimited spectrum of social and physical planning concerns at the local, regional and provincial levels in which residents of Ontario are involved in very responsible ways to an unprecedented degree.

The provincial Government felt that the revision of a Directory of Community Groups in Ontario would present an excellent opportunity to learn more about the nature of community groups in Ontario: how they function, what they do, what resources they have and what their life span is. These are some of the questions that we have attempted to answer by collecting and analyzing all the information provided by the groups themselves on the Directory questionnaire.

The questionnaire was divided into three main sections:

- 1) History, Membership and Structure
- 2) Activities
- 3) Resources

The summary will follow this pattern and will present, as far as possible, a comparative approach to our findings.

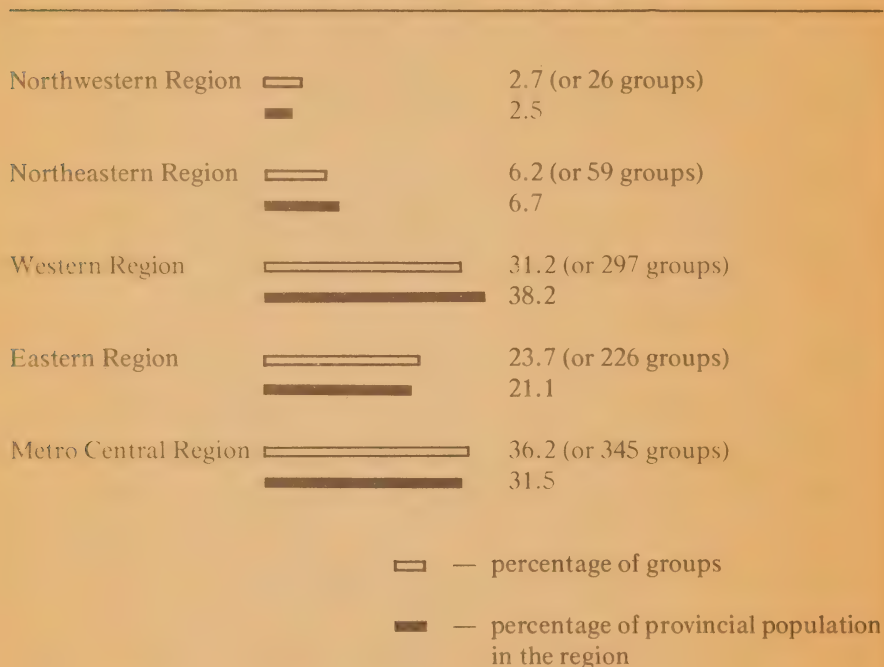

WHERE ARE THESE GROUPS?

Before we begin to examine specific characteristics of community groups, it may be useful to find out where most of them are located. As one might expect, the large majority of groups is found in the urban centres. The City of Toronto and the Region of Ottawa-Carleton contain the largest proportion of groups. The Borough of North York follows third, while the District of Muskoka contains the fourth largest number of community groups (in this case, primarily cottagers' associations).

The following two tables present in graphic form the distribution of groups by the five provincial regions and by Borough, County or Regional Municipality.

Table I: Comparison of the percentage of groups per Region with the percentage of population in each Region*

*The figures for provincial population have been taken from the 1974 Municipal Directory published by the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, Queen's Park.

It is interesting to note from Table I that the percentage of groups returning questionnaires from each region compared to the total number of groups responding from across the province appears to be almost directly proportionate to the percentage of that region's population compared to the provincial total. For example, the Eastern region of the province contains 21.1% of the total population of Ontario; it also contains almost the same percentage (23.7%) of the community betterment self-help groups that responded to our questionnaire.

One possible conclusion from this somewhat surprising discovery is that proportionately every region of the province is equally active in terms of organized community betterment and self-help groups. Geographic location or the degree of urbanization would not appear to be influencing factors in the initiation of community groups.

WHAT ARE THESE GROUPS LIKE?

1. History

One of the most interesting questions concerning the life span of community groups is the determination of a "peak period" for their formation. We have asked ourselves the following general questions: what period saw the largest formation of community groups?, is it possible to identify an increase in the growth of groups?, and are their growth patterns erratic or stable?

From the questionnaires analyzed (953), the earliest formation date for a group was 1875! Needless to say, there are not many groups whose histories go back this far; however, there are identifiable periods in Canada's history which show some interesting patterns in the formation of community groups. For example, we have no indication of any groups forming during the World War years, either between 1914-1920 or 1941-1944. Similarly, the growth in the number of groups begins to escalate quickly during the prosperous nineteen fifties and sixties when citizens perhaps found themselves increasingly capable of resolving difficulties themselves. The following table illustrates how community groups have increased in number from pre-1900 to the present.

2. Membership

As one might expect, not only is the number of community groups growing, the number of persons joining these groups is also growing.

Groups indicated on the questionnaire that the size of their membership was determined by three distinct types: individual memberships, family memberships, and in the case of umbrella associations, by the number of separate group memberships. This three-way distinction made it difficult to make general statements about the proportion of increased memberships over the years; however, it is quite evident from examining the questionnaires themselves that membership for all types of categories (individuals, families and groups) has almost tripled.

3. Structure

In general, most groups tend to adopt the familiar corporate organizational structure. Two thirds of the groups have a written constitution, almost ninety percent have an elected executive (including president or chairman, vice-president or vice-chairman, secretary-treasurer), and two thirds have a committee structure designed to share responsibilities among group members to carry out specific tasks (such as membership, newsletter or special projects committees).

The elected executives of groups tend to meet more frequently than the general membership. Paradoxically, most groups meet as a whole either on a regular monthly basis (29.9%) or only when necessary (27.8%).

While the percentage of community groups who have incorporated themselves is relatively small (23.4%), the fact that more and more groups would take the time, money and effort to initiate this process is significant.

This trend would tend to indicate that many groups find it necessary to have a recognized legal status in their pursuit of goals and objectives, and that more and more have sufficient resources to become incorporated. The analysis indicated that, for the most part, the largest number of incorporated groups were involved in neighbourhood improvement activities followed by cottagers' groups and the environmental protection/conservation groups.

However, if we examine the percentage of incorporated groups of the total number of groups indicating priority activities, the ranking changes:

- 100% of Co-op Housing groups are incorporated
- 43% of Community Media groups are incorporated
- 36% of Consumer groups are incorporated

28% of Cottagers' groups are incorporated
25% of Single Parent groups are incorporated
25% of Community Action Centres are incorporated.

Very few groups (72) have or are awaiting a charitable organization number.

WHAT DO THESE GROUPS DO?

1. Activities

The second major section of the questionnaire was designed to discover and examine the specific types of activities in which community groups become involved. Drawing upon observations of the Office on Community Consultation and others, fifteen categories of activities were stated on the questionnaire (including an "other" category) and respondents were asked to number in order of importance which categories best described the activities of their group. In addition, they were requested to briefly describe the group's current projects or issues in which they were involved.

In analyzing the questionnaires, we found that sometimes groups could not specify which of their activities was the most important - all their activities were of equal importance. Almost one quarter of the groups felt they could not number their activities by level of importance.

Thus, there would seem to be two methods of answering the question, "In which activity are the majority of groups considered involved?" The first method is to determine how many groups considered a specific activity to be of primary importance to them. By isolating the first priority activity that each of these groups indicated on the questionnaire, the following breakdown is evident:

- #1 — Neighbourhood Improvement
- #2 — Environmental Protection/Conservation
- #3 — Cottagers' Concerns

This breakdown indicates that the above three activities were considered to be of primary importance to the groups which stated they had a priority activity. As mentioned, three quarters of the total number of groups did so. In other words, the largest percentage of these groups (27%) considered neighbourhood improvement to be their most important activity, eleven percent considered environmental protection/conservation as their primary activity, and almost nine percent considered cottagers' concerns as their most important activity.

The following table illustrates the number of community groups for each activity category according to the importance of the activity as assigned by the group.

Table IV: Number of Groups in Each Activity Category by Priority Ranking (Part One)

However, it is important to emphasize that a significant number of groups could not prioritize their activities. The second method of answering the question posed at the beginning of this section takes into account all the community groups who responded to the questionnaire.

In this method, the level of importance assigned to an activity by the group is disregarded. Instead, we determine whether or not the group considered the specific activity as one of its concerns. By isolating which activities were mentioned most frequently by all the community groups surveyed, the following breakdown is evident:

- #1 — Neighbourhood Improvement
- #2 — Environmental Protection/Conservation
- #3 — Pollution

This method indicates that in a more general manner, community groups are concerned primarily with their local environment (the neighbourhood) and with the state of the natural environment. It is interesting to note that when all activity categories are considered on an equal basis (i.e. with no determination of importance) cottagers' concerns which previously ranked third in importance, now ranks eighth.

2. Development of Popular Concerns

An interesting question relating to the date of the groups' formation and their activities is the extent to which specific activities grew in importance as indicated by the growth in numbers of groups engaged in these activities during specific periods of time.

It has been possible to compare the number of groups formed per year with their specific orientation. This comparison allows us to identify which activity has received the most attention during certain periods of time. For example, the oldest form of self-help community betterment group that responded to our questionnaire was perhaps surprisingly, the cottagers' groups. The data indicate that five cottagers' groups were formed before 1900 and are still active today!

In most cases it is apparent that a dramatic increase in the numbers of groups engaged in all activities is occurring.

There is a noticeable split, however, between the number of community groups which formed and grew from 1950-1974. It is apparent that these latter groups are oriented to a much greater degree towards social service concerns:

legal aid, consumer concerns, co-operative housing, welfare and mothers' rights, day care, single parent concerns, and to some extent, community schools.

In the following table, the numbers of groups with priority activities (three quarters of the total number) are compared with their dates of formation. It is worth noting that the figures for the current decade (1971-1980) are projected figures based on the number of groups presently indicating the specific activity as a priority in 1971-1974.

Table V: Growth of Interest in Specific Activities as Shown by the Number of Groups During Collapsed Time Periods.

	Pollution	Environmental Protection/ Conservation	Neighbourhood Improvement	Tenants' Rights	Community Action Centre	Cottagers' Concerns	Community Schools

1971-1980	32	107	262	52	25	7+	17

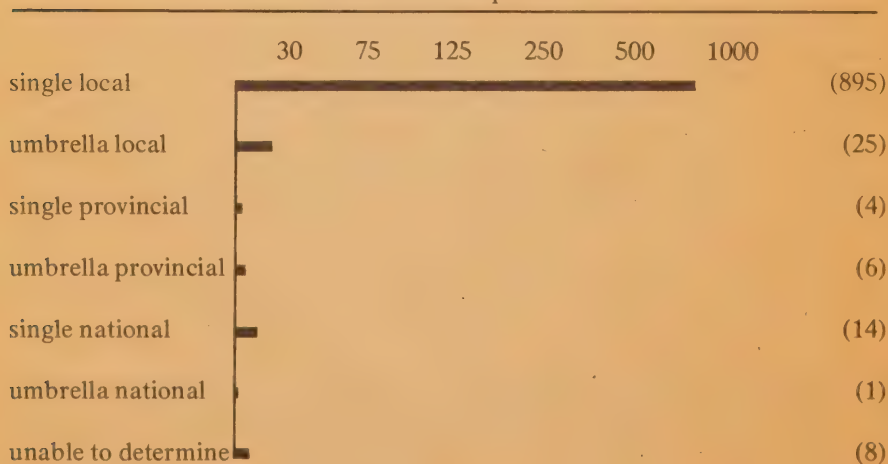

+ This figure may be misleading as our questionnaires were mailed during the winter and spring months when cottagers are not generally active. Perhaps if we had a special mailing for cottagers, this figure would have been higher.

3. Group Focus

Many of today's community groups are expanding their focus to encompass their region or even larger areas. As one might expect, the large majority of community groups are what we could call "single local" in focus; that is they are a group of local people whose attentions are turned towards their immediate surroundings. Some other groups are representative of other smaller local groups (these we have called "umbrella local"). Still others focus their energies towards provincial or national concerns, again representing either themselves or other groups. The following chart illustrates the relative proportion of such groups:

Table VI: Group Focus

4. Involvement of Others

One of the questions in examining a group's focus is to assess the group's impact upon the community in terms of the approximate number of people who are involved in the group's activities. We asked community groups to estimate this number on a monthly basis. Most groups (68.8%) involved 1-50 persons per month in their activities; 12.6% involve 50-100 persons while almost the same percentage of groups (11%) involve over 100 persons in their activities on a monthly basis.

5. Communication with Others

Another interesting aspect of groups' activities is the extent to which they communicate with their neighbours. Some groups indicated that they sent some form of communication to their members rather than to the entire community.

Most groups (81%) send some form of communication either to their members or to the local community. Since some groups send more than one type of communication, the following total percentage does not add up to 100. The types of communication sent may be broken down as follows:

bulletins	— 48.3%
newsletters	— 15.8%
newspapers	— 9.5%
other	— 30.0%

6. Presentations to Decision-Makers

Many groups are utilizing existing government bodies and agencies to achieve their aims. We were interested in learning if groups presented briefs or submissions to decision-makers and who these decision-makers happened to be.

Contrary perhaps to what most people tend to think about community groups, almost all groups rely to some extent on accepted procedures for achieving their goals.

Of the groups analyzed 86.8% have submitted briefs to some formal decision-making body. Most of these submissions have been presented to local or regional councils (70.3%). Approximately one third have been presented both to local boards (such as school boards or planning boards) and federal and provincial agencies. Almost thirty percent of the briefs have been presented to the Ontario Municipal Board.

These figures tend to reinforce the notion that most groups have a local focus and utilize municipal councils and local boards more fully than the provincial or federal levels of government.

WHAT KINDS OF RESOURCES DO GROUPS HAVE?

There are a number of different kinds of resources which groups utilize in achieving their goals. Many groups rely upon elected officials, professionals in various fields, internal and external financial resources, and assistance in-kind (such as meeting space, stationery and so on).

1. Use of Elected Representatives

Almost all groups have had some contact with their various elected representatives. Thirty-four percent (34%) indicated that they "always" contact these people while fifty-eight percent (58%) indicated "sometimes". Only 5% of the groups indicated that they have never contacted any of their elected representatives.

In keeping with the developing trend that most groups are of a local nature, the most frequently contacted representative was the local councillor (80% of the groups did this). Regional councillors and federal Members of Parliament were utilized by approximately 25% of the groups. Provincial Members of Parliament were contacted by approximately 45% of the groups.

2. Use of Professionals

Most groups relied to some extent on the assistance of professional resource persons. In many cases, these experts were members of the group and served in the interests of achieving the group's aims. In other cases, external professionals were called upon to provide information or advice. Approximately 62% of the groups indicated that they had used professional people at some time. The types of professionals included:

- lawyers - mentioned by 35.6 % of the groups
- architects and planners - mentioned by 17% of the groups
- social and community workers - mentioned by 14% of the groups
- technical, scientific or medical advisors - mentioned by 15% of the groups
- financial advisors - mentioned by 2% of the groups
- other types of professionals - mentioned by 10% of the groups

3. Use of Paid Staff

Although we were primarily interested in volunteer groups, there was some indication that at some point a few groups had relied upon paid staff. Most groups (82.9%) indicated they had never hired staff persons. The likelihood of hiring part-time or full-time staff appeared almost equal: 7.2% had hired part-time staff, 6.3% had hired full-time staff.

4. Membership Fee

Almost three quarters of the groups (71%) collect a membership fee. Interestingly, only slightly more than one third (38.4%) prepare an annual budget.

5. Financial Assistance

The questionnaire categorized types of external financial assistance into six possible sources of funding. The groups were requested to check the appropriate source(s) from which they had previously received funds. The groups were not asked to indicate if they had never received funds.

Thus, the analysis indicates that of the 953 groups analyzed, 632 or two thirds of the total have either never received funding or refused to answer this question.

In any case, a breakdown of those who indicated that they had received funding from various sources is possible:

- funding from other sources - 94 groups or 9.9%
- funding from federal government - 81 groups or 8.5%
- funding from local government - 71 groups or 7.5%
- funding from provincial government - 57 groups or 6.0%
- funding from service clubs - 24 groups or 2.5%
- funding from public agencies - 18 groups or 1.9%

Approximately one half of the groups (43%) receive assistance in the form of help-in-kind. For most of these groups, meeting space is provided free of charge (29.5%). Other types of free assistance are stationery (6%) and advice (.2%).

SUMMARY

It may not be possible or desirable to try to locate the "typical" group that exhibits all of the characteristics which the questionnaire analysis indicated were common to community groups. However, our analysis indicates that the following description could apply to the majority of community groups in Ontario.

The group formed in an urban area during the late 1960's or early 1970's for the purpose of improving the neighbourhood. The group has an elected executive and committee structure. Bulletins are mailed to the community, and on a monthly basis usually up to fifty people are involved in the group's activities.

A membership fee is levied but an annual budget is not prepared.

Membership has tripled since the group began, and now the group is considering incorporation.

The group relies to some extent on the local council member, and to achieve its goals the group works through existing government organization. It presents briefs and submissions to local decision-makers and if necessary to appropriate provincial bodies.

The group probably does not receive financial assistance from external sources. It does, however, rely to some extent on professional assistance from lawyers who may be group members. The group does not employ paid staff.

It is clear from the analysis that the number of community groups in the province is growing rapidly and that they are becoming increasingly concerned about very specialized interests. Neighbourhood improvement groups continue to compose the bulk of self-help groups but many new activities relating to social service concerns such as day care, community schools, social assistance programmes and co-operative or non-profit housing are emerging. This trend would seem to indicate that individuals are taking a more active interest in their immediate social environment, and that they are sufficiently sophisticated and responsible to harness their energies for constructive purposes.

Contrary to the stereotypic notion of community associations who are seen as opposing anything the local Council proposes, causing unnecessary hold-ups and delays, and rabble-rousing, groups contacted would tend to think that their goals will be achieved by working with the "system" instead of against it. Groups continue to develop and present their own briefs or submissions to Councils, largely on their own initiatives. Nevertheless, they are working with their elected representatives to achieve their goals. In this manner, community groups become versed in the workings of government while their elected representative becomes even more aware and responsive to the concerns of his constituents.

CONCLUSION

In preparing this summary of questionnaire data, it is our hope that community groups across the province will learn a little more about others like themselves. It would seem that many groups experience growing pains and they feel they are the only ones who are suffering. This analysis indicates that this simply is not true! The majority of community betterment groups experience the same frustrations and difficulties. Perhaps with this Directory in hand, community groups with a desire to help others with problems will feel more inclined to contact other groups across the province in seeking solutions to problems or answers to questions.
